Lina Hashim's Suicide Bomber series and Jose Luis Cuevas's Mírate en este Espejo are artworks that require a closer look and more attention to reveal what is entirely in each work. In both of their pieces you see your own reflection in the piece and must decipher what is you and what is the art. I created this grainy photograph that is just an abstract placement of black and white at first glance, but once you look deeper into it you realize the scene in the photo and can decipher what was originally being photographed. The underlying message of my work is how every day we walk past people and pay no attention to them, but once you begin to focus on your surroundings you find the people in your community that you've never noticed before, and discover a connection amongst you all. I want people to look closer at my art like Hashim and Cuevas' art and truly appreciate my work and what I am trying to portray.
